

Running on

Christian Rinderknecht

`rinderknecht@free.fr`

May 20, 2023

Like a cup of tea
overflowing

she keeps going places
unexpected
beyond will and power

drawing silhouettes
of sweet fragrance
on this white morning and I can't help but clutch at the burning tablecloth again and again

I drape this tainted love over my broken heart and I keep going places
unexpected

like a make-believe ghost haunting every cup of tea with a trembling face

Without a thought
you hand me a second jar

Without a thought
I open it and you smile in profile
at this intimacy
like a wife

Hidden in plain sight
I wish we were them

secret delights
that can touch
and be open
without a thought

Late among the guests
shining and laughing
at brilliant jokes

we share one last drink with two ice cubes

Side by side
complicit and beautiful reflecting the moonlight

fatal icebergs
always float in a world of silence

always
shortchange the stars
ninety percent

below the surface

Her dangling arms
abandoned to the wind
like lianas

gently beat to the rhythm of her footsteps

oblivious to the choir of the forest around us whispering

staring
at the divine pendulums waiting for a sign

as I do

know the wild deer invisible yet so close

Hear its deep chest darkly drumming
an untamed song

about you

What a waste
I tell myself

this whole bread
stale
which you forgot at the back of the cupboard

I remember the loaf
warm and tender
like a promise of young love

and

— Let's make French toasts!
you say

When you go through my lines with me

sometimes
I slip in my own words and you want to slip too

with me

a blank page

Away

birch trees
bathed
in warm sunlight

Close

your white fingers
combing
your golden hair

Blinded

you guide my hands
to the clear waters
of the fountain

Thirsty

from your lips
the gulp
eclipses the sun

You used to hide in my books like in crannies and nooks

I would find you in Neruda sieving my favorite pages for a nugget of my soul

but metaphors whispered in ways I could not in ways I dared not until I found a curl of hair you left in a margin

Suddenly

a prod to the brass spring sends my heart palpitating like a broken watch

Bent over those pages on the corner of a table the words fade to white like a film overexposed to the halo of your blond hair only leaving behind the offbeat heart

of a blind man

Tonight
you open for me an alchemy book

By the oil lamp
flickering
the mute book speaks in crucibles and symbols of wild roses blooming on a lover's grave

of a split pomegranate under two half moons

of bellows sighing
over furnace anew

of the mystical kiss
of water and fire

of the geography of beauty spots

a secret zodiac for all senses on your body of soft amber where I die and am reborn

Do you remember how we used to play
winter in summer?

You'd furrow my hair with the tip of your tongue and the field would shiver under the plough

I'd sit behind you and embrace you like a coat my breath sending a frisson down your spine

I'd pretend to sled
my hands on your waist and your nervous laughter would melt my heart

As exhausted as the day you'd fall back on me and our breaths like geysers would ascend into the starry night slowly spinning around our cold noses

against each other
in the equator of my arms around you

Once
through a window of the log cabin
at dawn

we caught
the shivering world transfixed
watching its reflection in the dew

In a blink
the round mirrors
of iridescent water
had formed a boundless kaleidoscope and showed each other

your dreamy eyes
in vision wide

and wondered

Already the avid hour swallows
the shores of the world

Towards the horizon
shadows pursue whispers lost amongst the graves along the walls

From his skull
the poet sees everywhere ink flooding in

Yet you arise
in the still second of the vault
illuminating the doorway

with your bright face smiling down on me simple and elegant
like a blade

In a sarabande
you seem to say
come outside
in the fields of blue

and let your heart
slowly beat the drum
of another day

let this long night
surprise you
with a blue moon

The dying day shrinks between the clouds
and the rain starts drawing mirrors in the mud

until darkness drowns the match of eloquence and needles start piercing the firmament
in suns uncountable

They blink leagues away like you used to

when you stretched over me like a constellation and kissed me distantly

Now on my knees
my lips still reach for the stars but the gulp is dirty water

Quietly set against the light you are perfectly framed

I don't care what they think about the optics of love about the perfect shot at wild happiness

Like a forest
leaning against the twilight you harbor within yourself multitudes

that murmur darkly like one and suddenly go silent whenever someone laughs

Slowly I dare a hand to your black hair
shadow amongst shadows

but you are startled by my eyes like those of a silent film actor in a close-up

Caught in my headlights this magnificent soul of yours hesitates before flitting away leaving me in awe

pupils dilated
quietly peering into your night

In my brimming eyes

the hinterland
suddenly
met a rising tide

a painting by Turner

of ripped curtains of mist behind an old boat tugged to her last berth to be broken up

where flowing waters wash beams and lashes across your overcast eyelines

wrecked by promises
lying eerily at the bottom of your Black Sea

magnificent and haunting you follow again the wind moaning in faraway sails

In your secret garden
when the early light accounts for the world
you prune the rosebushes

like the many queer lives within you that ask something always refused

You keep saying to them

*If I listened to you
we would grow wild and who would love us then You can only feel and I see Go to your places and sleep*

But sometimes a whisper quivers
and blooms under the sun transfiguring you

and making you divine in spite of yourself

before flitting away
like a dream cut short

Will you ever be like that always for any one being?

I raise my standard like a sail catching oblique sunbeams from the fleeing horizon on the seas

above the firmament

and I set the course

for your heart
overturned
like an inkwell on a letter to you

for I smuggle jewels
from the celestial orbs

under the cover of night

I will show you how quaint and eccentric my buried treasure is like a comet

who always feels the pull to your circular orbit

from an archipelago of solitude

because the island
comes to the shipwrecked

Under a coat of ermine dreams offer the skies
echos scattered away

on the white page

the inkwell overturns
like the horizon

Under shroud and vermin the yearning soul cries
echos scattered away

on the snow field

darkness many returns
flood the horizon

Those clear eyes

clearer yet this morning to have loved another

A clearer sky

whose rising Sun
left two blue puddles
where you search for me amid the dew

Sleds rush down a hill — each bump threading a note to the braids of their life lines to the necklaces of their laughter

Like them
I draw on immaculate pages invisible parallels that conjure up your silhouette

Hide and seek in the mist — your white hands over my eyes your panting for breath sends a long shiver down blending with that of winter

I caress the blank pages of a book open to the invisible invoking your pale body under my fingers

trembling on soft hills

my breath is taken away at each descent so impatient at each ascent!

Exhausted —
lying on the snow
we watch passing clouds and I quench my thirst in the calm stream
of your words
before oblivion

Only remain these verses in Braille
where I feel your steps towards the white paradise

In this waltz
of oblivion and regrets

I step forwards
and I forget
all the lessons
I swore to remember

You step backwards
and you regret
learning so much about me

Come

The third beat is not here yet
We don't have to repeat the same missteps

against each other

let us stand still like that afternoon in the pouring rain
when I warmed you
in my arms

Across the dinner table a basin of apples where you used to sit classically framed and lit with the soft tones of your cheeks

full and ripe
from your wide smile

where I used to sink
my teeth for a taste of good and naughty

Is this still life
still a life?

Again
she reaches up on one foot
to my neck

and the world
again
is an old-fashioned waltz slowing with a smile

like a ballerina
on a music box
she did her best

like the rest of us spinning
on this Earth

raising our arms
to the sky

By the Seaside
when everyone's going home

tired

an orange Sun is planed down by the swaying horizon

and grated zest dances
on the waters

of salty pupils

by a Monet in a museum
when everyone's going home